GOOD TO KNOW

AI explains, the official code decides

In 2026, an AI assistant (ChatGPT, Gemini, Le Chat) becomes a patient theory tutor: it explains a road sign from a photo, clears up a priority rule, writes practice questions and corrects your mistakes, any time and without judgement. It does not replace the official question bank, nor real driving practice. You do the revising, the AI walks beside you.

- The official code is what counts

Signs, priorities and limits differ from country to country. Always check your country's official source; AI can be out of date or wrong.

- Drill the reasoning, not fake questions

AI-generated questions are for understanding. To pass, practise on an approved question bank, in the real test format.

- The theory test is really about safety

These rules are not only for passing the exam. On the road they protect lives, starting with your own. The right habit of understanding why rules exist makes it far easier to remember.

The Sign Explained

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a patient, clear driving instructor.

Context: I am revising the theory test for [country] and I am stuck on this sign [describe it or paste the photo].

Task: explain what it means, what it requires and where you meet it.

Format: its meaning in one sentence, the action expected of the driver, an example situation, and one classic trap to avoid.

What you get

A sign that finally makes sense. You stop memorising it and start understanding what is expected at the wheel.

The Rule Cleared Up

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an instructor who explains traffic rules simply.

Context: I do not really get [e.g. right of way, roundabouts, safe following distance].

Task: explain the rule in plain words with a diagram described in text.

Format: the rule in one sentence, the cases where it applies, one common exception, and a way to remember it.

What you get

A rule that makes sense. Once you get the why, you answer correctly even on a question you have never seen.

The Revision Plan

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a revision coach who builds a realistic study plan.

Context: I sit the test on [date], I have [30 minutes a day] and I am weak on [topics].

Task: build me a day-by-day revision plan up to the exam.

Format: a weekly calendar, the topic for each day, a clear goal, and a general review break before the big day.

What you get

A clear path to the exam. You know what to revise each day instead of skimming everything at random.

The Notion That Sticks

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a memory-tricks specialist.

Context: I keep mixing up [e.g. speed limits, road markings, traffic lights].

Task: give me simple ways to remember these notions without confusing them.

Format: for each notion, a trick or a mental image, and a mini-question to check it holds.

What you get

No more mix-ups. A good trick locks in for good what you kept getting wrong.

The Practice Questions

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an examiner who writes realistic theory questions.

Context: I am revising the topic [e.g. right of way] of the [country] test, beginner level.

Task: ask me multiple-choice questions, one at a time, and correct after my answer.

Format: a question and its options, then, after my answer, the correct one and a two-line explanation.

What you get

Tailored drilling, on demand. You test your weak spots as many times as you need.

The Mistake Understood

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an instructor who breaks down mistakes without judging.

Context: on this question [paste the question], I answered [your answer], the right one was [answer].

Task: explain why I got it wrong and how to stop repeating the mistake.

Format: the logic of the right answer, the likely source of my confusion, and one rule to remember in a sentence.

What you get

Every mistake becomes a lesson. You turn a slip into a rule learned for good.

The Mock Exam

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are the examiner, running a mock theory test for [country].

Context: realistic format, [40] single-answer questions across all topics. Stay in your role.

Task: ask one question at a time, wait for my answer, keep score, do not correct until the end.

Format: at the end, my score, the questions missed by topic, and the two topics to review first.

What you get

Test-day conditions. You measure where you stand and get used to the pace of the exam.

The Weak Spot Targeted

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a coach who improves weak spots.

Context: in my last mock I mostly missed [topics], here are the questions [paste them].

Task: drill me on these topics until I master them.

Format: a set of targeted questions, the correction explained, and a green light when the topic is nailed.

What you get

Your weak spots fixed one by one. You focus effort where it earns the most points.

The Careful Read

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an instructor who teaches how to read a theory question without falling for traps.

Context: I lose points on questions I know, from reading too fast.

Task: give me a method to read and answer each question without being tricked.

Format: the steps to read a question, the words that change everything (except, always, never), and a three-point checklist.

What you get

No more careless slips. A methodical read wins back the points you were losing for nothing.

The Big Day

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a coach who prepares the exam mindset.

Context: I sit the test in [a few days] and nerves make me doubt myself.

Task: prepare me for how the day unfolds and give me simple ways to stay calm.

Format: the night before and the morning, what to do during the test, how to handle a blank, and one line to reassure me.

What you get

Walking in calm and ready. Nerves fade when you know exactly what to expect.
