GOOD TO KNOW

AI imitates, a human verifies.

In 2026, AI-made fakes have exploded: a photo can be invented, a video doctored, and a loved one's voice cloned from a few seconds of audio. The goal is almost always to make you act in a hurry. Your best defense is a habit: doubt, slow down, verify at the source.

- No detector is 100% reliable

AI can be wrong both ways: flag a real one as fake, or the reverse. It helps spot clues, it does not decide for you.

- A voice or a face proves nothing

A face or a voice no longer identifies someone. Facing an emergency, hang up and call back yourself on the known number.

- Never money or codes in a rush

No message, voice or video justifies sending money or a code without checking. Urgency is the scammer's favorite weapon.

The right habit: if content shocks or rushes you, verify before you share or pay.

The Map Of Fakes

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a media-literacy trainer who explains things simply.

Context: I am [non-technical] and I run into doubtful photos, videos and messages on [WhatsApp, Facebook].

Task: explain the main kinds of AI-made fakes and the checking reflex for each.

Format: a simple table (photo, video, voice, text), with one common example and the first step to verify each.

What you get

A clear map of the ground. You know which fakes exist and, for each, the very first reflex before you react.

The Tell-Tale Signs

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an expert who spots doctored images.

Context: someone sent me a photo of [subject] that I find strange.

Task: give me concrete points to inspect to judge whether it is faked.

Format: ten clues to check (hands, teeth, ears, eyes, reflections, shadows, warped text, blurry edges), most to least telling.

What you get

A checklist you keep in mind. You look at an image with the right eyes, instead of trusting your first impression.

The Image Under Scrutiny

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an image checker used to reverse image search.

Context: I want to know where a photo comes from [describe it] before believing or sharing it.

Task: guide me step by step to find its origin and context.

Format: the steps of a reverse image search (which tool, what to type), then three questions to judge if the source is reliable.

What you get

The real story of the image. You find where and when it truly appeared, and stop sharing a photo taken out of context.

The Too-Perfect Photo

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a journalist who separates the true from the spectacular.

Context: a shocking image about [subject] is going around and everyone shares it.

Task: help me judge if it is plausible and how to confirm it.

Format: three reasons to doubt, three independent checks to run, and one thing to confirm with an official source.

What you get

A filter against the hype. You step back from an image that plays on emotion and wait for solid confirmation.

The Video In Slow Motion

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a specialist in deepfake videos.

Context: a video shows [a well-known person] saying or doing something surprising.

Task: tell me what to watch, frame by frame, to spot a fake.

Format: the signs to watch (lips out of sync, rare blinking, face edges, light, metallic sound), and where to find the official version.

What you get

A methodical eye. You examine a video instead of swallowing it, and you know where to find the genuine version.

The Voice Of A Loved One

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a security advisor who knows voice-cloning scams.

Context: I get a call from a [loved one] who sounds panicked and demands money right now.

Task: give me the steps to follow to check it is really them.

Format: three control questions, the line to buy time, and the key move (hang up and call back the real number).

What you get

A clear plan under pressure. You keep a cool head facing a familiar voice and confirm the identity before acting.

The Family Password

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an advisor who helps families protect themselves.

Context: my family is spread out and I want a simple way to prove our identity in an emergency.

Task: help me create a family password and an easy rule to remember.

Format: three code-word ideas easy to remember but hard to guess, the rule in one line, and a short message to explain it to relatives.

What you get

A shared shield. A simple agreed word lets your relatives confirm it is really them, even if the voice sounds perfect.

The Anti-Panic Reflex

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are a coach who prepares people for high-pressure moments.

Context: I am pushed by [a call, a message] to send money or a code right away.

Task: write me the steps to follow so I don't give in and verify first.

Format: four steps in order (do nothing, cut the contact, verify through another channel, warn someone), and a ready line to say no.

What you get

An instant safeguard. You have ready moves that break the urgency and give you time to check.

The Clear Report

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an assistant who writes effective reports.

Context: I spotted a fake or a scam [describe] and I want to report it to [the platform, my bank].

Task: help me write a clear and complete report.

Format: a short subject, the facts in order, the useful links or screenshots, and the exact request, in a few polite lines.

What you get

A report taken seriously. You lay out the facts cleanly, which speeds up a block or a refund.

The Family Warned

PROMPT TO COPY

Role: you are an explainer who speaks to people not used to tech.

Context: I want to warn my [relatives, elderly parents] about a scam going around, without scaring them.

Task: write a simple, reassuring message that explains the trap and the right reflex.

Format: a short message, a concrete example, the two moves to remember, and a line inviting them to ask if in doubt.

What you get

Relatives better armed. A clear message protects them from a common trap and gives them the reflex to check with you.
